Aaron Swartz documentary to be released this Friday

Movie night. The film will be available online and have a release on limited big screens, including the Somerville Theatre.

Shortly after Internet-sharing activist Aaron Swartz took his own life, countless messages of condolences appeared on blogs and social media mourning his loss.

Now, a full-length documentary about Swartz called "The Internet's Own Boy: The Story of Aaron Swartz," will be released Friday and play at the Somerville Theatre.

The online mourning and the film focusing on Swartz are both things that Noah Swartz believes his brother would have been surprised by.

"I don't think it's something he would have expected," Noah Swartz said. "I don't think he thought the Internet cared about him or cared about his role in the Internet."

Swartz helped co-found Reddit, as well as the group Demand Progress, and created an early version of RSS. He was 26 when he took his own life in 2013 while awaiting trial on federal charges that he allegedly stole millions of academic articles from a private database after hacking into an MIT network.

The movie was funded in part by roughly 1,500 people who donated more than $93,000 on Kickstarter.

Swartz's brother, father and others appear in the film to talk about him and his efforts.

Besides his family, those who worked with and influenced Swartz, including Harvard professor Lawrence Lessig, also appear in the film.

It's a mix of sit-down interviews with those who were close to him and home movies of a young Swartz showing an early interest in and knack for computers and the Internet.

The film follows Swartz as he grows up and makes the switch from creating things for people to advocating on behalf of people.

"He made this turn, he made this decision to use his skills for public interest and public good. That's a pretty inspiring approach," said Brian Knappenberger, the film's director.

"I hope people walk out of the theater wondering about their skills. You don't have to be a genius computer hacker, you know? Everyone has skills. It's how do you put those skills into the public interest and the public good."

The movie premiered during the Sundance Film Festival earlier this year and received good reviews. It will be shown in some theaters and

Swartz on trial

Swartz faced up to 35 years in prison and a fine of $1 million if convicted on charges of wire fraud, computer fraud, unlawfully obtaining information and recklessly damaging a protected computer.

- It was alleged that Swartz broke into a restricted computer wiring closet in a basement at MIT in order to download a major portion of archived digitized academic journals onto his computer.

- The journals were a part of JSTOR, a paid subscription database used to access millions of primary sources. Some universities pay as much as $50,000 for an annual subscription.

Quoted

"There are still people fighting for these things and still people doing really good work. ... People should tune in to what's happening now rather than focusing on what's happened previously."

Noah Swartz, brother of Aaron Swartz

will be available for download for purchase online. Knappenberger said he expects the film will be "widely, widely shared" among Internet users.

Sentencing. Judge allows scammers to choose fate

After spending the next three years in jail for trying to defraud the One Fund Boston, two South End brothers will have to spend 468 hours performing community service for amputees and people with brain injuries.

In an extremely rare move, Suffolk Superior Court Judge Jeffrey Locke let Branden Mattier, 23, and Domonique Grice, 28, choose their fate during Monday's sentencing hearing: five years in jail or three years and a day in jail, three years of probation and six hours of targeted community service every other Saturday for the three years after their release.

Mattier and Grice, who were found guilty earlier this month of charges including conspiracy to commit larceny, chose less jail time and community service.

"Community service will be focused on serving those injured by either loss of limb or brain injury — the very population that Mr. Mattier and Mr. Grice sought to defraud," Locke said. "That may include, I don't know, building handicapped ramps. It may include serving as an aide at a rehabilitation facility. It may include changing bedpans, but it is serving that population of injured individuals."

Mattier filed a false claim to the One Fund shortly after the 2013 Boston Marathon bombings that named his already deceased aunt as an amputee. Investigators discovered it was a false claim and prosecutors said Mattier and Grice exchanged text messages in which they discussed buying new Mercedes Benz cars as they waited for their $2.1 million claim.

Mattier, who has a 3-month-old daughter, talked in court about growing up without a father and wanting to be a good father for his child.

He apologized to his family for putting them through the ordeal. Grice said he's learned from the experience and apologized, but Locke took issue with the men not specifically apologizing to the victims.

Tragic death

MIT student falls to death in India

A Massachusetts Institute of Technology graduate student who went missing while attending a workshop in India has been found dead.

Kaitlin Goldstein, 28, a fourth-year student at MIT, was found Saturday in a ravine below where she had gone running on June 14, according to MIT. She had not been seen since that day.

Her parents traveled to India to search for her and they said she apparently slipped while running on a loose rock and slid off of a cliff, MIT said in a news release. METRO

Judge: Tsarnaev pal a 'flight risk'

Azamat Tazhayakov is depicted in a courtroom sketch from May. JANE COLLINS and charged with obstruction of justice. A judge yesterday said the Kyrgyzstan citizen posed a flight risk because he has friends and family around the world.

Also in federal court Monday, a lawyer for another friend of Tsarnaev says he rejected a plea deal offered to his client who he said "knows he's not guilty" of obstruction.

Azamat Tazhayakov is accused of removing items from Tsarnaev's dorm room after the deadly bombing. Tazhayakov's attorney did not disclose the terms of the plea deal, but said he is confident the 21-year-old will be acquitted.

Jury selection is slated to begin next week in Tazhayakov's trial.

Three killed as Amtrak train collides with SUV

Derailed. Officials look into how a train struck a vehicle on the tracks in Mansfield.

Police have launched a "very long, extended investigation" after a Boston-bound Amtrak train struck an SUV in Mansfield around midnight on Sunday, killing the SUV's three occupants.

The train, which originated from Washington, D.C., was carrying 180 passengers and crew when it crashed into the SUV and derailed. None aboard the train were injured.

The SUV was dragged for at least a mile, police said.

The victims, two males and

Crews investigated the scene of the crash on Monday. / TRANSIT POLICE

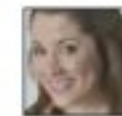

a female, were not identified as of press time Monday.

Investigators on Monday scoured the lengthy debris field, which they described as heavily wooded. It was unclear why the vehicle was on the tracks, and whether the train operator applied the brakes before the collision, police said.

It was also unclear where the vehicle entered the tracks, though police said there are multiple entry points nearby.

"There is a tremendous amount of work that still needs to be undertaken and there are even more facts ... that we simply do not know at this time," a Mansfield FD spokesman said.

How to get rich in the stock market

I turned a few thousand dollars into a few million dollars. Then I turned several students into millionaires, too. Now, people always ask me for stock picks. Rather than give out stock picks, though, I prefer to teach people a replicable strategy — it's better to teach a man to fish, right?

Here are the basics on how my students and I beat the market year in and year out. As you read my advice, don't be shocked if my tips go against conventional investing wisdom. If you want to get rich in the stock market, you can't do what everyone else is doing.

Never go for ## home runs

No matter what your favorite kind of stock is, learn to take 10 to 30 percent profits when you have them, and don't go for the lower odds of 100 percent-plus wins. Even though it feels great to have a big winner and compound those gains by holding for years, by aiming for home runs, you often strike out and fail to grow your accounts by taking solid, if not spectacular, profits when you have them. After some initial glory, too many people hold on too long and feel "married" to their investments, so their gains turn into losses.

UP: Adobe announced a mobile version of Photoshop for the iPhone — awesome! These two companies should work together more!

DOWN: Donald Sterling has a new girlfriend who is a fraction of his age; we should all wish her luck.

Find stocks with positive news

Most companies have enticing overall stories, but I find stocks that have had hugely positive news recently — such as better-than-expected earnings, a new contract with a large company or a successful product launch — rise faster than the rest because meaningful news has "legs" that can influence a stock for weeks or even months.

Don't diversify: Invest and trade like a sniper

For exclusive commentary, visit Metro.us/blogs.

Instead of investing in five to 10 stocks, I usually only have one or two at any one time because like a sniper, I aim small, miss small and when I'm right, I hit my target and move on. I'm not saying go "all in" on any one stock; I just use a small portion of my account on one or two stocks when they have meaningful and positive news.

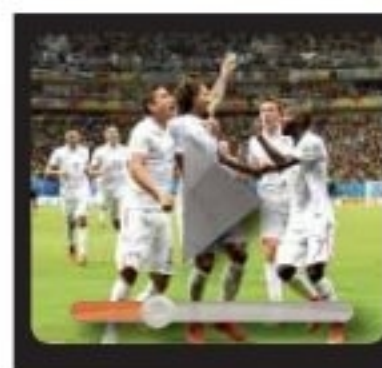

Do this again and again, even if you lose sometimes, and you will beat the stock market like my students and I do.

Jessica Simpson is back

Jessica Simpson is hot again, and girlfriend knows it. The singer is posting one hot photo of herself after another on Instagram. During the weekend it was this photo, where she shows off her super-hot and toned legs that got everybody's attention. She captioned the picture, "Hiding from the paparazzi, so why not pose for Eric?" Welcome back to the spotlight, Jessica! We hope you (and your hot body) stay here this time around. ### Frances Bean Cobain schools Lana Del Rey

Whether Lana Del Rey actually thinks it's cool for singers to die young, she told The Guardian that's what she thinks, so it's out there to stay, no take-backsies. You know who definitely doesn't think it's cool for singers to die young? Frances Bean Cobain! The daughter of Courtney Love and Kurt Cobain, the latter of whom died two decades ago at the age of 27, before Frances Bean was even 2, took to Twitter to share her thoughts on the matter.

"I'll never know my father because he died young & it becomes a desirable feat because ppl like u think it's 'cool'" she tweeted at Lana Del Rey. "Well, it's f—ing not. Embrace life, because u only get one life. The ppl u mentioned wasted that life. Don't be 1 of those ppl."

Cue the LDR supporters, who then accused FBC of attacking their hero! (Can we get these initials-as-nicknames thing to stick?) But Frances was quick to tweet that she is also a supporter, since, duh, she doesn't want Lana Del Rey to die young.

"I'm not attacking anyone. I have no animosity towards Lana, I was just trying to put things in perspective from personal experience."

London Lohan is just as controversial as New York Lohan

If Lindsay Lohan is looking to make her move to London permanent, she's not off to a good start with the locals. Lohan reportedly drew the ire of Kate Moss after reaching out to Moss' husband, musician Jamie Hince, which apparently upset the British supermodel, according to the Sun. Tensions came to a head during a recent run-in between the two women at a London restaurant where Moss "was ranting about it to fellow diners," a source says. "The argument went on for a while, and Kate seemed extremely annoyed with Lindsay. People around them noticed it."

Tell-all. Courtney Robertson shares off-camera dirt in her juicy memoir

Ironclad contracts be damned, Courtney Robertson has written a book detailing everything about "The Bachelor" — even what happens on the fantasy suite date (in her case, reverse cowgirl). In "I Didn't Come Here To Make Friends," she goes into great detail about what went wrong with Ben Flajnik and gives juicy details about previous boyfriends, including actors Adrian Grenier and Jesse Metcalfe.

We called Robertson for even more dirt ("Yes, Ben's read the book. He's not exactly thrilled...") — and to get her to tell us the types of girls you'll see without fail on every season of the show.

1 The girl who is not there to make friends. "I think I said this on my season. Every season there is a girl who says that."

2 The drunk girl. "There's always one girl who is actually slurring in her confessional, totally shamer pants."

3 The confessional crier. "I'm sorry. Have these girls never heard of waterproof mascara?"

4 The girl with history. "This is the sob story girl. There's always one."

5 The girl with the boyfriend back home. "This happened to my best friend on my season, Casey [Shteamer]. Her ex-boyfriend actually contacted the show because he was having a hard time."

6 The trouble-starter. "There's always one girl who is the instigator and starting the gossip."

7 The insecure girl. "This is the girl who is always worried she's going to be sent home. Going into every rose ceremony, you never know for sure if you're going to get one, but it's weird to talk about with the people you're competing [against]."

8 The VIP cocktail waitress. "There always seems to be one. There also always seems to be a nanny and dental hygienist too!"

9 The prude. "There's always a girl who doesn't want to kiss on camera. The perfect example of this is Selma [Alameri], on Sean Lowe's season."

10 The flat-out freak. "There's always a couple really obnoxious girls, and most of the time they leave the first night." EMILY LAURENCE

OK WITH THE EDGE

Cummings' special, "I Love You," airs Saturday at 11 p.m. on Comedy Central. / COMEDY CENTRAL

Visit Metro.us
for more on what keeps Cummings
joking about sex.

Interview. Comedian
Whitney Cummings
talks leaving network
TV for the freedom of the stand-up stage.

Whitney Cummings is doing just fine. The comedian is back with a new stand-up special, "Whitney," may be on people's minds.

She addresses the topic early in her special, mentioning that she's glad to be back doing stand-up after working in TV for a few years. After the audience cheers, she responds with a chastisement that none of them watched the show. It's a funny moment, but when talking to Cummings, it's clear she's not holding a grudge.

"People come up to me and they're like, 'I'm so sorry about your TV show.' I'm like, 'I'm fine?' They treat me like I have some terminal illness or something. We did, I think, 45 episodes. To me, that's a big success," says Cummings.

"When young comedians ask me advice, I say the first thing you should say when you get onstage should always be what the audience is thinking, whether it's about your personal appearance, or whatever it is — just address it so that they're not thinking about it or distracted by it."

Part of why Cummings is ready to move on is that she can do more stand-up.

"Doing a show is all-consuming. You really don't have time [to perform], which is hard, because doing stand-up is really where you figure out your point of view on things," she says. "So being creative without doing stand-up, it's almost like body building without going to the gym."

Actually, she adds, comedians aren't too dissimilar from workout addicts chasing their high: "Doing stand-up satiates some kind of need in you to either be heard or to connect with people, or the dopamine high, whatever it is. Stand-ups don't really have a choice in the matter. This is how we function."

Discomfort zone

Who's racy?

Cummings says it's freeing to return to stand-up, a world with less concern about propriety than television.

"Literally nothing is off-limits. You're able to go to the edge. The edge is my comfort zone, for whatever reason," she says.

Still, she's a little thrown by those who call her material racy.

"The only thing that I'm talking about that is racy or edgy is sex, the thing that we all do, all the time. It's so weird to me that that's edgy," says Cummings.

"There's this thing where honesty is kinda taboo. When people get near the truth, or comedians or artists get near the truth, people get uncomfortable. That uncomfortable area is where I like to live."

Make the journey part of the fun

"The vacation starts long before you get to the destination," Hoefle says. "Children live in the moment, so you can't rely on just talking about how much fun it will be when you get there." Luckily most cars are equipped with DVD players these days, but Hoefle has a more creative way of keeping children entertained without just relying on movies and books. "Before the trip, I make a few 'surprise bags' full of cheap goodies for the kids. Every couple of hours, they get to open one. It gives them something to explore and play with," she says.

How to truly relax on a family vacation

Tips. Make everything from the long car trip to planning the day's activities run smoothly.

"Family vacation" can seem like an oxymoron. How can you possibly relax with the kids around? But lo and behold, Vicki Hoefle, parenting expert and author of "Duct Tape Parenting," found a way. Put her tips into practice and you might remember something from your trip other than screaming kids and wanting a glass of wine.

Get everyone's 'top three' before you leave

While you're still in the planning stage, Hoefle advises that each family member list three things he or she wants to do, three things he or she wants to see and three places he or she wants to eat. Then when you get there, hold mini family meetings every morning and pick one thing from each list when planning the day. When you make the kids part of the process, they are more willing to wait until the afternoon or when it's "their turn" because they helped create the plan.

Schedule in some down-time

Having a two-hour rest period in the middle of the day might seem like wasted time when there's so much to cram in, but no one will have fun if the kids are cranky. "Instead of saying, 'You get grouchy in the afternoon,' say 'You need a rest time so you don't get grouchy,'" Hoefle recommends.

Don't expect everyone to go to bed at the same time

If you have kids with different bedtimes, booking connecting rooms will make things a lot easier. If not, it's still best to split the younger kids up from the older ones when it's time for the little ones to go to bed. One parent can take the older kids down to the lobby to play games or watch a movie on the computer, while the other parent gets the younger kids to bed.

Bonus tip

Be flexible and go with the flow

"The most memorable moments are often the simple things," Hoefle says, "things you didn't see coming." When you don't overschedule and allow for moments to just happen is when the best memories are made.

Engulfed. After each hurricane, Texas' eastern vacation spot remakes itself better than ever.

An observant eye will see the signs everywhere: "1900 — this high. 1919 — this high. 1961 — this high. 2008 — this high." They're water marks on houses, churches, restaurants, museums and shops. Their heights vary, but they always mean one thing: "The water was this high, but look at us now."

Galveston, Texas, began as a bustling port city, back when Victorian ideals held sway with Western culture. The care, pride and wealth are obvious in the old houses that still stand, for whom the water never got so very high. Visitors can tour many of the best and ogle the rest along pleasant, sunlit streets. These were houses built on the premises of invincibility and optimism.

Students of history know it didn't last. The last year of the 19th century brought with it a hurricane that still holds the record as the deadliest natural disaster in United States history. Thousands died and the island was flattened. Those few homes that still stand were saved when the smashed detritus of every other building in the vicinity created a de facto

But Galveston rebuilt. Engineers raised the entire grade of the island. Buildings were built higher and sturdier. Community pillars donated vast sums, and officials and residents banded together to make the island great again. And when the next hurricane hit, and the next, they cleared away the rubble and started over.

When Hurricane Ike hit in 2008, the island took it hard. But, as is the Galveston custom, residents rebuilt better and sturdier. Six years later, there are few signs that troubled waters ever swept across the city — except the ones that residents display on their walls, porches and stilts, markers of human resilience.

A brick pillar along Pier 21 shows the high-water lines from various hurricanes. The mark from 1900 sits far above the others.

Where to eat

Best breakfast

Sunflower Bakery

One of the glories of Texan cuisine is the state's take on breakfast. Migas? Got it. Crab cakes? Got it. Southern-style eggs over corn cakes with ranchero sauce and cheese? Yes, PLEASE.

Best seafood dinner

Gaido's Seafood

This is about as historical and blue-blood as a restaurant can make itself, and it takes its reputation as seriously as it takes its seafood, delving deeply into the Creole tradition.

Want to go all out?

Number 13 Prime Steak and Seafood

This new establishment, with its attention to ingredient acquisition and the upscale atmosphere, would feel at home along a big-city avenue.

Horoscope

Cancer | June 21-July 22.

You will be overlooked if you sit on the sidelines waiting for things to happen. Take an active interest in your community, and get out and do things instead of just daydreaming.

Leo | July 23-Aug. 22.

You will encounter many hurdles if you try to start something new today. Concentrate on clearing up old projects first, making it easier for you to move onward and upward.

Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22.

Your natural gifts can be put to good use if you give others the chance to participate in your plans. Networking will help you find worthy contributors.

Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22.

You should make quick work of your to-do list in order to ease your stress and free some time to enjoy life with family or friends. Put love on a pedestal.

Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21.

Relax and let things unfold naturally both at work and at home. If you are too intense, you will intimidate those around you. Be patient and understanding for the best results.

Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21.

Trust in your talents and work hard promoting them to others. Your persuasive personality will help you get the help you need.

Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20.

If you are uncertain about moving forward with your plans, review what it is you are trying to achieve and make the adjustments necessary to succeed.

Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18.

You will hurt the feelings of someone close to you if you are insensitive about the problem that he or she is experiencing. Treat those around you the way you want to be treated in order to build healthy relationships.

Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20.

This is a good time to take care of home-improvement projects. Your energy and enthusiasm will encourage others to pitch in and help, or at least offer good suggestions.

Aries | March 21-April 20.

Look for people who share interests with you. The knowledge and experience you gain and offer will lead to a long-lasting friendship.

Taurus | April 21-May 21.

Your edge over the competition will go up in smoke if you let others know your plans. Keep your strategy, secrets and whereabouts to yourself.

Gemini | May 22-June 20.

Don't base your actions on assumptions. Stay out of a costly predicament by getting the facts first. An excess of talk will work against you.

Tom Foreman just isn't very funny

Re: 'The list of grievances' (Metro, June 20-22) This guy, columnist Tom Foreman, is sarcastic without being witty, and never has much of a reasoned argument for his opinions. Posting a random daily rant from Facebook wouldn't be much different. I'm not offended, just repeatedly disappointed. Drop him and nurture a rising star.

JONATHAN HECHT, VIA EMAIL

Put down guns, pick up peace

How many more people need to die, or be shot, for us to adopt gun control? What about our rights to jobs, healthy food and homes? A healthy ecology? What about our right to live and love and have health care and joy? The main things we produce are prisons, pills, guns and bombs. We need a society that is not about profit, but about healing and love. When I look at the world it fills me with sorrow. Children today are really going to suffer tomorrow. We must not for one minute tolerate the killing of our children daily in the streets, in the schools and on and on. The problem is not simply mentally ill people, most of whom do not commit violence. Our society is mentally ill and creating daily the conditions that encourage people to become violent. I challenge gun owners to be truly brave, bury your guns and find peaceful ways to feel safe. If you were not afraid, you would not own guns. Heal your fear with love. There is a better way. Let us adopt strict gun control:

No assault weapons. Let us have a department of peace that creates programs to help violent people make better choices. Let us spend our vast resources on enhancing life here and around the globe. Let us create fulfilling jobs, so that no one is faces the stress of overwhelming economic problems. No to guns, bombs, death and destruction.

FORGET LOVE, THE CELTICS SHOULD RE-BUILD IN DRAFT

Maybe you've seen those "Who's next?" Celtics billboards around town the past few weeks. On the billboards are a couple of basketball-playing silhouettes, set to a green backdrop, and there's more than a few question marks scattered about. Conspiracy-minded Celtics fans have taken the silhouettes as some sort of clue to the potential landing of Kevin Love.

The original intent of the billboards, however, was probably just to get fans excited for the upcoming draft (Thursday, 7:30 p.m., ESPN). The Celtics hold the No. 6 and No. 17 picks in what is considered to be the best draft class of the past five years or so. But ever since Love spent a full weekend boosting the local economy via alcohol sales tax a month ago, it has become almost expected that he would be coming to Boston. Yes, something is going to happen this week in the form of a transaction. But it might not be what the masses want and expect. The worst-case scenario for those seeking those promised "fireworks" would be for Danny Ainge to trade down (or out) in the draft. The second snore of a scenario would be for the Celtics to stay put at No. 6 and No. 17. This second scenario isn't sexy, but it's the most likely, and it's probably the safest way to go. Adding the likes of a Noah Vonleh, Julius Randle or Aaron Gordon is the prudent thing to do.

There is a chance Joel Embiid could fall to the Celtics at No. 6 in the 2014 NBA Draft. / GETTY IMAGES

The Celtics could also stay the course in the long run and keep their upcoming first-round draft picks from the Nets. Brooklyn is in a state of flux, so much so that owner Mikhail Prokhorov is rumored to be mulling the sale of the franchise. Chances are that those picks coming to the Celtics in 2016, 2017 (they can swap with Brooklyn) and 2018 are going to be good, if not great.

Many say that the days of building a championship team through the draft are over, but few teams have had the fabulous opportunity that the Celtics currently have to actually pull it off. Ainge, by most assessments a tremendous drafter, could have four or five cracks at finding the next Paul George or Paul Pierce or Dirk Nowitzki or, dare I say, LeBron over the next few years. Landing a player of that caliber would make the Celtics contenders for the next 15 years and the C's could eventually supplement this young stud with any sort of Tier 2 free agent, given the vast cap space that would come their way.

Despite what you've been hearing, this is likely Ainge's Plan A. Plan B — convincing Flip Saunders to part with Love, giving up the truckload of future assets to acquire Love, re-signing Rajon Rondo to a max deal and finding a way to lure a third superstar to Boston using the small cap space and leftover assets remaining — won't be anything close to easy.
